Weather of Concern

- A Pacific storm system moves into interior Northern California on Thursday. It is expected to create hazardous road conditions across the west slopes of the Northern Sierra Nevada/Lassen Park region and the Western Plumas County high-country. A Winter Storm Warning is in effect for these areas from Noon Thursday until 0600 Friday due to heavy snow and gusty winds. The valley and foothill areas will see rain increasing by Thursday morning with southerly winds locally gusting to around 40 mph. WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

A strong storm system will bring gusty south winds tonight with periods of rain through Thursday. Snow levels will fall near 4000 to 4500 feet with the potential for thunderstorms and small hail on Thursday. The wet weather pattern will continue through next week.

Medford Weather:

As the front moves in and precipitation rates increase, snow levels are expected to be dragged down to around 3500 feet. This puts snow down into town at Mt. Shasta and could eventually impact I-5 and other area roadways. Metropolitan road forecasts in the area show road temperatures remaining above freezing until around midafternoon, at which point snow will begin to stick to roads. It will likely take until sunset for I-5 to become snow covered, and the heaviest precipitation will be ending shortly after that.

Reno Weather:

A winter storm will bring strong winds and mountain snow today and tonight, with light rain and snow for lower elevations. Residual showers over northeast California will taper off Friday, with drier weather Saturday ahead of a weaker system for Sunday. Temperatures near average Friday and Saturday will rise to above average for early next week.

San Francisco Weather:

A Pacific storm system will spread rain across the Bay Area today and produce locally strong and gusty winds along the coast. Greatest rain totals are forecast to be in the San Francisco Bay Area particularly the North Bay with lighter amounts farther south. Mostly dry weather is forecast for Friday and Saturday along with seasonable temperatures. A weaker weather system will likely bring rain to the northern areas on Sunday.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

A quick hitting winter storm will bring a shot of heavy snow impacting Sierra travel this afternoon and tonight. Travel will also be impacted in the Valley as the band of rain will move across the Valley during the evening commute. Gusty southerly winds ahead of the front may result in local power outages from downed branches.

Hanford Weather:

Pacific weather system is expected to move into California today and bring a chance for light precipitation this afternoon through Friday. High pressure will return for the weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Low pressure will move across the West Coast today bringing increasing clouds as well as the chance of some light showers north of Point Conception. High pressure will build through the weekend bringing dry and warmer conditions with the warm and dry conditions continuing through the first half of next week.

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

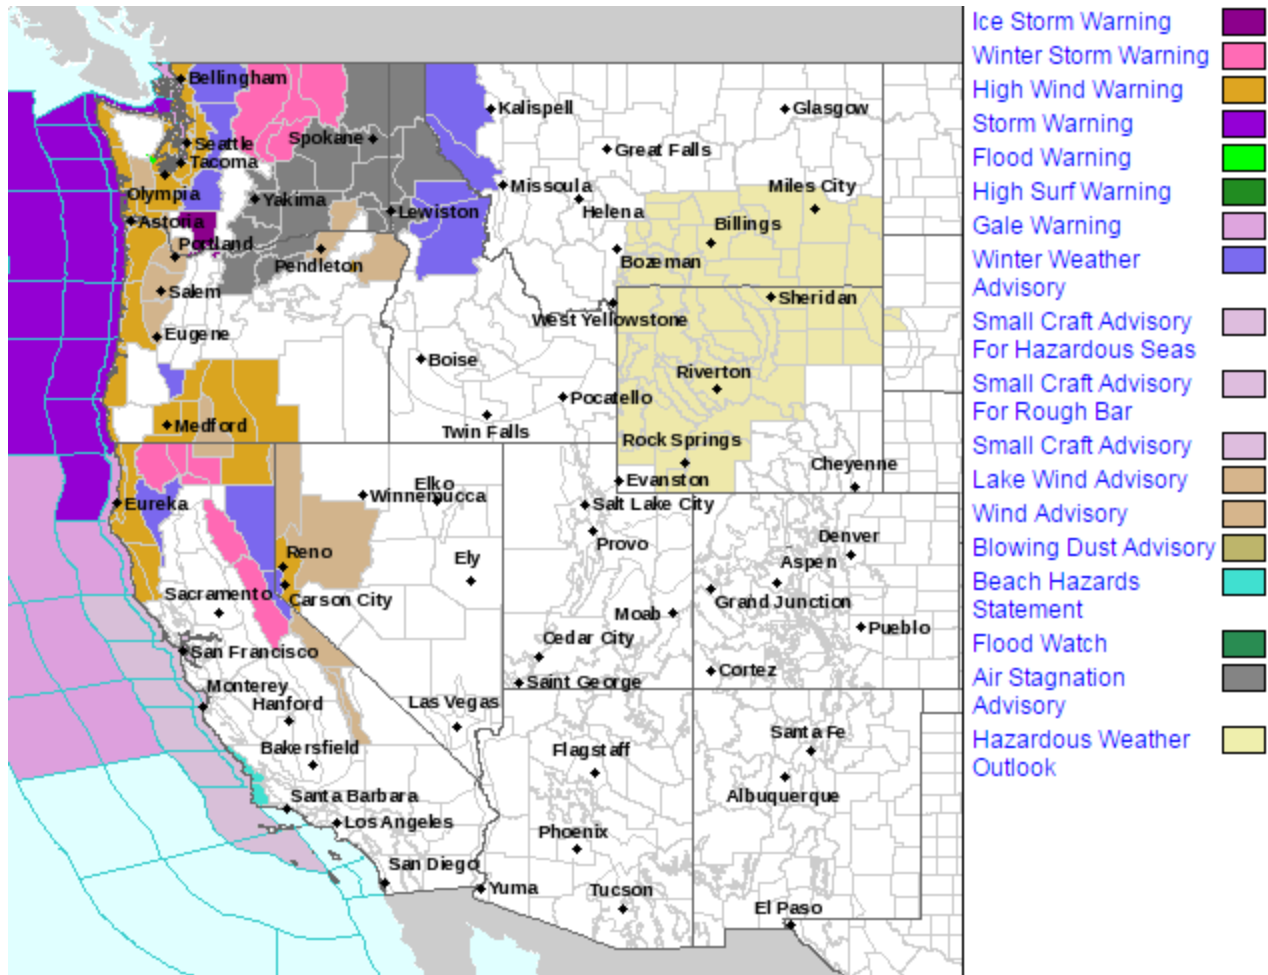

Sunny and warm weather will continue today. High pressure will weaken and onshore flow will return tonight and Friday. This will bring cooler weather Friday with a brief return of the marine layer and some coastal clouds. High pressure and offshore flow rebound quickly for fair and warmer weather this weekend into early next week.

Southeast California Weather:

High pressure building into the desert southwest will dominate the weather through the weekend with weather disturbances steered north. Mostly clear skies, light winds, and warmer than normal temperatures will be common heading into next week.
